Lenia Mono is a meticulously crafted monospace sans-serif font family that harmoniously blends the precision of monospaced design with the clarity of sans-serif aesthetics. This font family offers a clean, modern appearance, making it ideal for coding environments, technical documentation, and minimalist design projects. Its uniform character spacing ensures readability and consistency across various applications, from digital interfaces to print media.

Designed with versatility, this font family supports a wide range of languages and includes weights from regular to extrabold, including 5 weight styles. OpenType features include stylistic alternates (O, a, l, o, r, g, & y), figure variations (superiors, inferiors, fractions, circled numerators, standard ligatures), arrows, and broad Latin language support to accommodate diverse design needs. Whether developing a sleek user interface, crafting detailed technical manuals, or creating contemporary branding materials, this monospace sans-serif font family provides the perfect balance of functionality and style.

Regular	Gedung Sate remains one of Bandung's architectural trésors — a blend of Dutch Indo-Deco detail and local élan. Built in 1920, it served as Gouvernements Bedrijven, and today it houses the Governor's office of Jawa Barat. Its façades, corridors, & central tower reflect a harmony of culture and structure, where tropical light meets	The crater of Tangkuban Parahu, lying north of Bandung, tells the légende of Sangkuriang and Dayang Sumbi — a tale of love, pride, and destiny. Mist drifts through the pines, while traders sell warm sérabi and kopi tubruk nearby. Visitors from Göteborg, Zürich, and São Paulo marvel at the mountain's calm symmetry, its curved rim echoing
Medium	Once called La Rue Braga, this street was the cœur of Bandung's Art Déco movement. Painters, poets, and musicians gathered at cafés beneath neon façades. Today, you can still feel that énergie — modern scooters rush past retro arcades, where typography once adorned every shop window. Braga's contrasts, from brutalist corners to curved balconies, mirror the dualité of	In Ciwidey's cool highlands, Kawah Putih glows a soft turquoise under changing skies. The air smells of soufre and wild mint, as travellers from Malmö, Łódź, and Montréal take photos by the crater's edge. The color shifts from émeraude to pale gray with each passing cloud — a moment of design by nature itself, silent yet spectaculaire.
Semi Bold	Near Leles, Garut, lies Candi Cangkuang — the only Hindu temple in West Java. Surrounded by a tranquil lac and bamboo groves, it stands as a mémoire of Sundanese spirituality. Locals row small perahu across the lake, offering flowers and prayers. Its stones whisper with time, like letters carved in basalt, each form shaped with respect and précision.	Established in 1920 as Technische Hoogeschool te Bandoeng, ITB became the cradle of modern Indonesian ingénieurs and créateurs. Its rationalist façades and leafy courtyards inspire order and imagination alike. Within these halls, equations meet sketches, science meets art — a perfect alignment of logic and beauté, much like well-drawn
Bold	South of Bandung lies Situ Patenggang, a lake of légendes and soft lumière. Couples visit Pulau Asmara believing their love endures when they sail around it. The water mirrors pine hills and moving clouds, forming shapes as gentle as handwriting. Calm, clear, and émotionally warm — a natural design in perpetual motion.	Once a quiet military town, Cimahi grew around railways and red-brick factories built in the early 1900s. The old centrale électrique still stands beside narrow streets lined with workshops and cafés. Engineers, artists, and craftsmen share the same rhythm — from machinery to melody. Today, the district breathes a new énergie, transforming its industrial
Extra Bold	In the eastern side of Bandung, Saung Angklung Udjo celebrates music, wood, and wonder. Children play angklung in perfect harmoni, laughter echoing through bamboo halls. The air smells of kopi and lacquer. Tourists from Genève, Oslo, and Montréal clap along, smiling at the sound of Sundanese tradition reborn. It's heritage turned into performance — simple, joyous, and	Perched above the city, Dago was once a mountain retreat for colonial voyageurs seeking cool air. The road still winds past art déco villas and cafés serving old recipes — gâteau pisang, chocolat chaud, and kopi tubruk. From here, the view reveals Bandung's labyrinth of roofs and rivers. A quiet place where mémoire, design, and light coexist in balance.

South of the city lies Majalaya, once the "Manchester of Java." Looms and cotton mills shaped its heartbeat for decades. The air carried the hum of spinning threads — filature et couleur, work and patience intertwined. Even now, the legacy lives on in woven patterns sold across Asia, each fabric a symbol of endurance and art. It's tradition in motion, stitched with précision.

Hidden between green valleys, Kampung Naga keeps the soul of Sunda alive. The roofs of ijuk shimmer after rain, and families gather under oil lamps. There is no electricity, yet light feels warmer here. Words like sérén, légende, and mémoire still matter — they remind us that simplicity can be sophisticated, and tradition can outlast technology.

The rolling tea fields of Ciwidey shimmer under pale sun. Workers move gracefully, baskets on their backs, picking leaves with precise motion — almost like drawing accents on paper. The scent of fresh thé, humid earth, and eucalyptus blends into peace. Among these hills, clarity feels natural, geometry feels human, and design grows quietly.

Built in 1884, Stasiun Hall was once the gateway between Batavia and the highlands. The hall still holds its vintage signage and ticket booths in carved teak. Trains whistle from dawn till dusk — carrying students, merchants, and rêveurs to their next chapter. Names flash on the board: Cirebon, Yogyakarta, Surabaya, Zürich. A journey in motion, guided by design and order.

Villa Isola stands like a sculpture on the northern hills of Bandung. Built in 1933 for Dutch magnate Dominique Berretty, it fuses modernist geometry with tropical ornament. From its terrace, the city unfolds like a typographic grid — lines, rhythm, repetition. At dusk, the façade glows with soft lumière, whispering of time, travel, and proportion.
